AUTUMN.....By C. D. STUART.
The Spring has flown—and Summer flies,
And beauty is but slow decay
Of fading flowers and waning eyes,
That have their birth and death to day.

A hue but yester' on the earth
Of rose and blue-eyed violets.
A sound of young birds making mirth
Most musically by me lit;

To morrow, like a dream hath flown
The wild bird's song, the Summer hue,
And cold grey colors darkly thrown,
Reflect the clouds and skies of blue.

It is but an hour till Winter time,
Still Winter brings a tender light,
And why not let the icy clime
That cheats not, and is ever bright?

Mid all, but one frail thing survives,
Which every hue hath caught and kept;
The unchanging heart, and in it lives
The death of all that we have wept!

Remembrances of golden days
Of Childhood's fair and fleeting hours
The tender songs and smiles of praise
That charmed us like the breath of flowers.

All real and all dreamy things
Are buried there, and will not part.
But gleam on Memory's drooping wings
Unfading as the living heart.

Nor does it mourn that Time hath set
Its seal of change on all that's fair,
If mid the changing, it has met
The likeness of itself to share.

Blent as the lovers' whisper'd tale,
The melting of their volumned eyes,
Or brooks, or sounds, that in the vale
Go mingling with a thousand sighs.

Ab, it can bear decay of flowers,
And be of all but life bereft.
Hi, smiling through the cold gray hours,
One loving like itself is left!
